Unearthing Skeletons of the Old Cholera

Leveling an Old Land Mark - A Bad

Man Defies the World and

Five skeleton, or bones sufficient to constitute the framework of that number of men or women, were yesterday unearthed streets by workmen engaged in excavating for a water main. Some of the bones were solid, others but dust held in the original shape. One skull, which, from its size and general appearance looked as if it had once adorned the shoulders of a woman, was in almost perfect condition the jaws heing full of small even and what looked once adorned the shoulders of a woman, was in almost perfect condition the jaws being full of small, even and what looked like the hardly defective remains of beautiful teeth. All these skeletons are no doubt the bones of victims of the cholera epidemic of 1832, as they were found within the limits of the territory or section set apart by the corporation of Georgetowa as a potter's field. Hurdreds of those who fell victims to the disease while at work on the Chesapeake and Ohio canal were buried in this spot, and old residents remember when the dead of several cholera ships headed for Georgetown were carted and deposited here in great ditches. The field extended then from the present northern line of the Presbyttrian cometer; to S or 6th street, taking in the earite square, with the exception of the property at the northwest, and even the trouble of removing the dead was taken. It is related by owners of actors it, the section that their foundations are built upon the benes of cholera victims. A little excavation, it is said, will uncover skeletons in this square at any time. Most of the dead luried there were Irishmen and foreigners of all nationalities and without the histerment of the neglect that followed the interment of the neglect that followed the interment of the secrets reminds me of an incident at any time. Most of the dead luried there were Irishmen and foreigners of all nationalities and without the interment of the neglect that followed the interment of the secrets reminds me of an incident nationalities and without friends. Herce the neglect that followed the interment of their remains. The skeletons and hones taken up yesterday by the shovel and spade were returned beside the trench where the water main is to be laid.

Waltzers and Maskers. Prof. Schlosser's prize masquerade ball $1.00 and waltzing contest came of last night at Linthicum Hall. The judges for the waitz were Messrs. Edward Roach, H. Harvey and H. Lydding. Their decision was in favor of Mr. George Lash and Miss Lizzle Truman. The judges for the mask were Messrs. Wild, Dallas and Hubbard, and Mr. Thornton Cropley, as "Old Hoss," and Miss Nellie Baldwin, as "Topsy," profited Miss Neilie Baldwin, as "Topsy," profited by their decision. Mr. George Thomas was declared to be the best policeman in the hall, and Mr. Randolph Koester, as the "City Sport," was commended for his make-up. Rich prizes were given the win-ners in the waltz and masquerade. The hall was crowded, and the enjoyment un-limited and unconfined.

The claim of Mrs. Janet M. Baldwin

Colorado against the government of Mexico for the murder of her husband on Mexican territory six years ago, referred to in dispatches from San Francisco, is still the subject of negotiations between Secretary Gresham and Senor Romero, the Mexican minister, but with no indications of imme-diate settlement. It is understood that the Mexican government disclaims all responsibility for the death of Mr. Baldwin, but is willing, in the interests of international comity, to make a reasonable mor tary allowance to the lawful heirs of the deceased, decidedly less, however, than the amount of the claim of $100,000.

A Member of the De Payne Commands ery on Mrs. Lease's Claims. A gentleman who is now residing in Washington, but a former resident of Fert Scott, and a member of Hugh De Payne Commandery of that city, the Knights Templar organization of which Mrs. Lease says she is an accepted member, is quite amused at the prominence which is given to the matter by people who know nothing shout Masonry. The gentleman, who is quite a prominent statesman and politician of Kansas, says that the proposition is so absurd on the face of it that it seemed hardly necessary to try to deny it. "It is on R (5th) street between 33d and 54th made of green cheese," he said, when he a good deal like denying that the moon is read in The Star that the recorder of the Grand Commandery of the Knights Tem-plar of Kansas had ordered the Hugh De living at that time. It took place a good many years ago and has not been much exploited, I think. It happened in a little town in the hoosier state where the lodge room was located in a double two-story frame building. The other building was used as a hotel. One of the boarders of this hotel, also a woman, made the discovery that the garret of the hotel building communicated with the garret of the lodge building and cooked up a scheme to get onto the secrets of the order, in which she was aided and abetted by the landlady of the hotel. There was no floor which she was aided and abetted by the landlady of the hotel. There was no floor in the garrets, so they dragged a board up and laid it over the rafters and then with penknives made holes in the ceiling and were ready for business. On the night of the lodge meeting the two women clambered up to the garret to get in before the lodge members assembled. The landlady was called away to attend to some household affair before they got over to the second garret, so telling her boarder to wait for her she hurried away, promising to come back immediately. She was a long time away and as the woman could hear voices in the lodge room and feared that she would miss some of the show she concluded to get on over by herself. The garret was uncomfortably low and where the two roofs came together almost impassable, but she got through despite the fact that she was a woman of goodly proportions. In attempting to keep on the narrow board, which was all that intervened between her and the plastering, she lost her foothold and over she went. She crashed through the ceiling of the lodge room with a regular Comanche war whoop, and, grabbing the rafters as she fell, hung suspended like Mahomet's sword before the eyes of the astonished Masons. It is no use to try to picture the amazement and consternation of the Masons. It is no use to try to picture the amaze-ment and consternation of the Masons, much less the feelings of the unfortunate for her to make a second attempt, and have yet to hear of a woman who ha
